

Employee wellbeing during COVID-19 & Beyond

On the path to a healthy business recovery

Protecting both mental and physical health

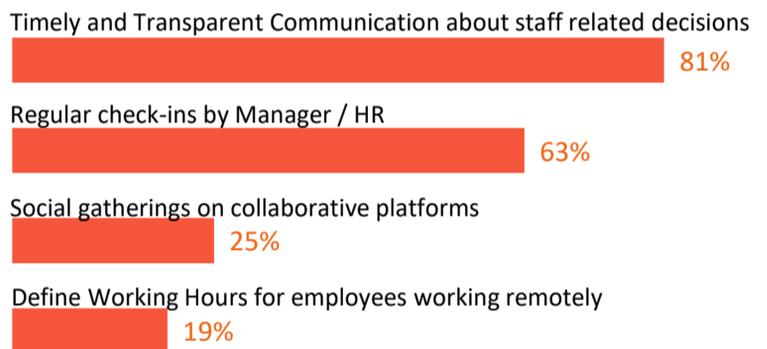

69% businesses responded to having offered corona specific health insurance coverage to their employees. While an insurance plan takes care of the basic COVID-19 related needs of employees, businesses are complementing this with proactive measures to address mental health by offering personal counselling sessions (58%) and organizing talks by health specialists (62%).

There has been a shift in the attitude of India Inc. towards the emotional and mental wellbeing needs of employees. Businesses are rethinking their employee-wellness strategies to accommodate changes in people's habits as a result of prolonged phase of working from home due to COVID-19.

The Work-Life Struggle

Acknowledging that the pandemic has shifted working hours and priorities, resulting in deep fatigue and stress, employers have introduced various measures to reduce the impact of a demanding workplace.

81% of businesses surveyed have recognised the importance of timely and transparent communication about workforce related decisions like salary cut, layoffs, furloughs etc. to keep their staff informed about business realities. Furthermore, 63% businesses responded to an emerging need for a more empathetic leadership by asking people leaders to make themselves available to talk to employees about their fears and work-related worries.

Special leave to show you care

More than half (56%) of the businesses surveyed have announced fully or partially paid special leaves for COVID-19 affected employees. The aim is to offer solutions that secure physical protection needs and support this with a holistic approach towards employee wellbeing.

